have found that there are bullies, victims, bully-victims, and bystanders. Bully-victims both bully others and are victims of bullying. Bystanders are usually people who don't bully others and aren't victims, but they are witnesses of bullying and their lack of intervention is a contributing part of the bullying cycle.

What may surprise most people is that the outcome of bullying leaves both the victim and the bully feeling awful after an incident of bullying. Researchers have learned that many bullies use bullying because they lack some basic and important social skills. Researchers have also found that bullies who do not receive intervention are more likely to
